service centres in Trans-Yamuna Area of Delhi.

(b) Out of nine service centre sites in MPD-2001, five are fully or partly encroached upon or unauthorisedly constructed upon, but they are not used for fish ponds.

(c) No, Sir, as no such approval is required. What has been referred to Government are four proposals in respect of alternative sites for approval to process for land use change. Out of these four proposals, Government has accorded approval in two cases and the remaining two cases have been referred back to DDA for necessary facts and details. The land use change has been notified in one of the two cases approved by Government. According to present estimates, most of the shops in service centres at the four sites which are free from encroachment will be disposed of by DDA by the end of 1995.
